INTRODUCTION

1. Dramatic changes in the world political landscape in the last 12 months have brought about gains in political freedoms and human rights and progress in the elimination of racial discrimination. Such progress was registered in Africa with the independence of Namibia and a number of significant developments in South Africa, which gave rise to expectations of negotiations towards the eradication of apartheid.

2. The release of Nelson Mandela and other political prisoners, the unbanning of political organizations and the relaxation of restrictions on the press implemented in February 1990 were considered as encouraging steps towards the creation of a climate conducive to negotations. Contacts between the African National Congress of South Africa (ANC) and the authorities in Pretoria at the beginning of May 1990 dealt with some of the remaining obstacles in the creation of such an appropriate climate. They include the release of all political prisoners, the withdrawal of the troops from the townships, the end of the state of emergency and the repeal of all legislations designed to circumvent political activity.

3. In the historic Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, approved by consensus at its sixteenth special session on 14 December 1989, the General Assembly called for the building of a non-racial democratic society in South Africa through negotiations. The Declaration defined a new constitutional order and the principles in which it could be based, the process of negotiations which would lead to that desirable objectives, the steps that Pretoria should take to create the necessary climate for such negotiation and the responsibilities of the international community supporting this process and objectives. In this context, all the Member States pledged, among other things, that they would use "concerted and effective measures, including the full observance by all countries of the mandatory arms embargo, aimed at applying pressure to ensure a speedy end to apartheid", and that they would "not relax existing measures aimed at encouraging the South African régime to eradicate apartheid until there is clear evidence of profound and irreversible changes, bearing in mind the objectives of this Declaration".

4. One of the potent measures aimed at applying pressure on Pretoria to abandon apartheid is the observance of the policy of sports isolation of apartheid South Africa. Since the progress prescribed in the Declaration is still very limited, i.e., negotiations have not even started and the pillars of apartheid remain intact, the implementation of the sports boycott remains not only timely but essential. It forms part of the "concerted and effective measures" that the international community has undertaken to speed the elimination of apartheid. The Special Committee, therefore, intends to continue publishing this Register and to advocate the strict adherence to the policy of sports isolation by Governments, organizations and individuals.

I. DISCRIMINATION IN SPORTS CONTINUES

5. Although it is widely recognized that genuine sports integration is not possible under the system of apartheid, white sports administrators continue to organize so-called integrated events, which have, however, failed to detract from the reality of segregation. A volley-ball tournament, for instance, scheduled at the Rainbow Valley Resort at East London had to be moved elsewhere because one of the teams contained three coloured players, who were barred from staying at the resort.1/ In another case, black karatekas taking part in the Transvaal Shokukai Karate Association Championships were forced to sleep 60 kilometres from the venue while their white counterparts were accommodated at a nearby motel. According to the organizers, there were no facilities for black competitors at the motel adjoining the venue.2/ Other examples of discimination are given below.

6. Six black anglers were refused entry to the Loskop Dam Overvaal Holiday Resorts near Pretoria because the facility was for white use only. The deputy marketing director of the Overvaal Holiday Resorts said: "the resorts are government-run and fall under own affairs. There are separate resorts for different races and, until the law is changed, there is nothing we can do."3/

7. A black official was refused entry to watch a football match at an all-white club at Pretoria that refused to allow blacks.4/ Three young swimmers were barred from using the indoor Hillbrow Swimming Pool at Johannesburg. All 27 municipal pools in the city are reserved for white use.5/

8. The white South African Tennis Union (SATU), hoping to avert expulsion from the International Tennis Federation, announced that it would expel any tennis club that practiced racial exclusivity. Thereafter, two clubs in the Transvaal, Selection Park and Valedale, held emergency meetings to drop the "whites only" stipulation from their constitutions.6/

9. The white-controlled South African Gymnastics Union evaded the issue of racial discrimination by vesting autonomous power in the clubs. Therefore, clubs refusing to admit members on the basis of colour, culture, language, creed or religion, will not be disciplined.7/ Most gymnastics clubs in the country still remain exclusively white.

10. Blacks who are forced to accept certain apartheid sports structures are, quite often, subjected to discrimination. Professional boxing has, on many occasions, been accused of being biased. This was evident in June 1989 when Howard Mpepesi, a black, fought Sakkie Horn, a white. Experts, including the English and Afrikaans television commentators, agreed that Mpepesi won the fight easily but the three judges, of which two were white, awarded the bout to the white boxer. The judges are nominated by the government-appointed South African Boxing Board of Control.8/

11. The Coloured South African Rugby Federation (SARF), which is affiliated with the white South African Rugby Board (SARB), exposed the discriminatory nature of so-called non-racialism in rugby. The President of SARF, in an address, stated that the "presence of non-white clubs and teams in Union competition is only outshined by their absence. The number of Federation players taken up in representative teams over the past decade can be numbered on the fingers of two hands". He continued "that competitions and provincial teams are holy cows in which the occasional and symbolic presence of non-white players are intrusions to be tolerated rather than encouraged".[9/]

12. South African police stopped 11 buses full of black school children from leaving a high school in Guguleto, near Cape Town, to hold a non-racial sports event. It was suspected that the police had been asked to intervene because the sports event was not organized within the framework of the apartheid Government's Department of Education and Training.[10/]

II. RECENT DEVELOPMENTS

A. Cricket

13. In the fields of cricket and rugby, two very popular sports in South Africa, there have been a number of developments. After years of lobbying by India, Pakistan, Sri Lanka, Zimbabwe, and the countries of the West Indies, the International Cricket Conference (ICC) resolved to impose sanctions on those cricketers who play in South Africa. At a meeting held in London in January 1990, ICC decided that any cricketer who maintained sports contact with South Africa would be disqualified from representative cricket for a period of three years if he was under the age of 19 and four years if he was over 19 years old. Cricketers who toured South Africa as members of a team would be disqualified for five years. The bans would take effect from 1 April 1989.[11/] The decision was welcomed by all organizations campaigning for South Africa's sports isolation.

14. In recognition of the decision, the United Nations Special Committee against Apartheid announced that the names of all cricketers who had played in South Africa before 1 April 1989 would be deleted from the United Nations Register. The Special Committee reiterated, however, that this was a "one-off" gesture for cricket and that future deletions would have to comply with the policy of the Committee.

15. In August 1989, the white South African Cricket Union (SACU), attempting to undermine the ICC resolution, announced that it had recruited 16 English cricketers to tour South Africa in January 1990.[12/] It was reported that each cricketer would receive approximately £80,000 for a 12-week tour, broken into a 6-week period per annum. Condemnation of the proposed tour came from all parts of the world.

16. Two black cricketers, Roland Butcher and Philip DeFreitas, who were included in the original team, were condemned by the black athletic community in the United Kingdom. John Regis, a top British athlete, accused the two of "betraying black sportsmen and black people".[13/] Eventually, Butcher and DeFreitas withdrew from the touring party. SACU had no difficulty in finding replacements for the two, considering the large sums of money offered to entice other cricketers to join the tour.

17. Another cricketer, Matthew Maynard, was informed that he would not be included in his County Club team, Gloucestershire, for a tour to the West Indies in 1990.[14/] The Labour-controlled Derbyshire County Council in England announced that it would withdraw its annual sponsorship of £14,000 from the Derbyshire County Cricket Club as one of its players had signed to be part of the proposed tour.[15] The Nottingham City Council cancelled a civic reception to honour the county team that won the national one-day cricket championship when it became known that three of the team members were part of the touring side.[16] The British Anti-Apartheid Movement organized a series of demonstrations at venues of cricket matches throughout the English cricket season.

18. The 16 cricketers who did tour were Michael Gatting (captain), John Emburey (vice-captain), David Graveney (player-manager), Chris Broad, Tim Robinson, Charles Athey, Matthew Maynard, Alan Wells, Chris Cowdrey, Kim Barnett, Richard Ellison, Bruce French, Greg Thomas, Paul Jarvis, Neil Foster and Graham Dilley. Three of the cricketers, Charles Athey, Chris Cowdrey and Richard Ellison, had, not long ago, signed pledges to the Special Committee stating that they would not compete in South Africa until the system of apartheid was completely eradicated.

19. In South Africa, the National Sports Congress (NSC) announced that it would organize demonstrations at all match venues. NSC also persuaded potential sponsors not to provide support for the tour.[17]

20. Overall, the ICC resolution has had a positive result in dissuading international cricketers from playing in South Africa. Previously, about 70 English cricketers migrated annually to South Africa. During 1989, however, many went instead to Australia, New Zealand and Zimbabwe.[18] It is estimated that only 13 cricketers went to South Africa during that year.[19]

B. Rugby tour to South Africa

21. The white SARB celebrated its centennial in 1989. Seven countries of the eight-member International Rugby Board (IRB) decided to send players to make up an international team to play in the centennial celebrations. New Zealand was the only country that refused to allow its players to participate.

22. There were world-wide protests against overseas support for the celebration of 100 years of racial South African rugby. The Special Committee, the Commonwealth Secretariat and the Organization of African Unity (OAU), strongly criticized the members of IRB that agreed to send players to South Africa.

23. Initial response from the rugby bodies in the United Kingdom and France were discouraging. The Secretary of the English Rugby Union said that the decision to send players to South Africa was in line with British Government policy.[20] The Vice President of the Scottish Rugby Union, Gordon Masson, said that any player who was free, white and 21 should be allowed to go to South Africa.[21] Albert Ferrasse, President of the French Rugby Federation, complained that rugby was the only sport being made to pay for the anti-apartheid lobby.[22]

24. As protests began to mount from many Governments, several prominent players announced that they would refuse to play in South Africa. Others were reluctant to accept invitations. The Australian Government influenced all of its top players to decline the invitations.

25. As late as a week before the tour was officially to commence, the South African Rugby Board had not assembled the full complement of players. When the team was finally put together, it was sponsored by the First National Bank of South Africa. Although rugby is considered an amateur game, it was believed that each player received about £20,000.23/

26. When the overseas team arrived in South Africa, local protests began to grow. Many individuals and organizations closed their accounts at the First National Bank, which was the tour sponsor.24/ There were demonstrations at Durban and Cape Town against the touring team. The demonstrators, black and white, urged the players to leave the country.25/ At Durban, 15 protesters were arrested outside the beach-front hotel where the players were staying. Twenty-two protesters were arrested at Cape Town for demonstrating peacefully outside the players' hotel.26/

27. There was also widespread revulsion outside South Africa about the devious means used to recruit players to take part in the centennial celebrations. City counsellors in Wales demanded action against the 10 Welsh players who went to South Africa and threatened to ban them from playing in local authority-owned pitches.27/ The Welsh Rugby Union's secretary and president threatened to resign. The Irish Government cut off a grant of £45,000 28/ and other major sponsors also withdrew grants from the Irish Rugby Union. The international rugby match between France and the Lions (selection from the United Kingdom and Ireland) was supposed to be an official celebration to commemorate the French bicentenary. When the French Rugby Federation sent its players to South Africa, the French Government withdrew the official bicentenary status for this international celebration.29/ The Welsh Rugby Union, deeply embarrassed, decided at its meeting held in October to end all official playing links with South Africa.30/ The Irish Rugby Union publicly conceded that it had mishandled the South African situation and declared that it would now actively discourage individuals from going to South Africa.31/

28. South African rugby has reached a crossroads and a decision needs to be taken on whether it should remain an amateur sport, gain membership in the International Rugby Board or continue with rebel tours. One question is what to do with overseas players who come out on rebel tours and are subsequently banned from participating in tours not sanctioned by IRB. The argument is that South Africa, having lured the players with offers of large amounts of money, feels obliged to absorb them into a local set-up, which would require restructuring the South African rugby infrastructure.

29. South African Springbok flanker Burger Geldenhuys summarized the situation saying that he was against professionalism or even rebel tours. He added that there was not enough money or people for support and that he did not think it was worth causing chaos in world rugby for such a shortsighted objective. Geldenhuys said that the unpalatable truth had to be faced: "Our Government has to change its policies and get rid of apartheid. That's the only way we will ever regain acceptance to world rugby. We might as well realize that."32/

C. Other sports fields

30. In the past year, several Governments and sports bodies intensified their stand on apartheid sport. Australia refused to grant visas to several South African sports administrators, and other countries urged their national sports bodies to abandon exchanges with South Africa.

31. The Canadian Government announced in June 1989 that it would tighten sports sanctions and urged all its sports organizations to suspend athletes and officials who participated in sports activities in South Africa. The Canadian Government also urged all its national sports bodies to seek the expulsion of South Africa from all international sports federations.33/

D. Golf

32. A number of golfers from Zimbabwe left the country and settled in South Africa in the early days of Zimbabwe's independence. In spite of their being permanent residents in South Africa, the golfers continued to use their Zimbabwean passports to circumvent the international boycott of South African sport. Concerned with the flagrant use of Zimbabwean passports for convenience, the Government of Zimbabwe decided to revoke, in May 1989, the passport of Mark McNulty, a resident of South Africa for more than 10 years.34/ Mr. McNulty is recognized as a South African representative in international golf.

33. Protest against international participation of South African golfers or golfers who have previously played in South Africa continued in various parts of the world. In June 1989, a protest was organized at the Canadian Open held at Glen Abbey, Oakville, Ontario, by Bruce Kidd, a university lecturer and former Olympian and Commonwealth gold medalist. The protest was against the participation of 14 golfers who had previously competed in South Africa.35/

34. In September the North Florida Rainbow Coalition and the Florida Student Coalition, United States, organized a protest at the Killearn Country Club against South African entries in the Centel Classic Golf Tournament.36/ The Rochester Anti-Apartheid Coalition organized a very effective demonstration at the United States Golf Open in protest against its policy of allowing South African golfers to participate. Two golfers from the United Kingdom, Simon Bishop and Jeremy Bennett, were barred from competing in the Trinidad Golf Open because they had previously played in South Africa.37/

35. Sweden has again continued to play a leading role in the campaign against apartheid sport. After intense pressure, the European Professional Golfers Association (EPGA) has conceded that Sweden can now bar golfers who play in South Africa. EPGA has informed all golfers that some countries could ban any golfer who plays in South Africa after 19 September 1989.38/

E. Tennis

36. Owing to a protest by the Australian Anti-Apartheid Movement (AAAM) Victoria, the South African flag was not flown at the Australian Tennis Championships held at Melbourne.[39] Earlier, AAAM Victoria organized a demonstration at the championships to protest participation of South African tennis players.[40] Following representation from Arthur Ashe of the United States, the Association of Tennis Professionals (ATP) cancelled two tournaments scheduled to be held at Johannesburg and Capetown in 1990.

37. A possible boycott by Canada and several African countries forced the Paignton Sailing Club, England, to withdraw the invitation to the South African team to compete in an international sailing event. However, the South Africans were invited to compete as individuals.[41]

38. Two international bowlers, John Bell (United Kingdom) and Peter Bellis (New Zealand), were disqualified from taking part in the 1990 Commonwealth Games as they had previously competed in South Africa.

F. Boxing

39. The former world featherweight boxing champion, Barry McGuigan of Northern Ireland, refused to fight South African champion, Brian Mitchell, for the World Junior Lightweight Title. McGuigan said, "I have seen far too much political tragedy in my own backyard to have anything to do with a system like apartheid that gives the advantage to one group of people".[42] The former Commonwealth boxing champion, Nigel Benn of the United Kingdom, turned down a £2 million offer to fight in South Africa. Mr. Benn, a black middleweight champion said, "I'd rather fight anyone in the world for £5 than earn all the gold in South Africa by boxing there".[43]

40. The Italian heavyweight boxer, Francisco Damiani, was barred from the rankings of the World Boxing Council (WBC) and from taking part in its championship programme for two years. The President of WBC, Jose Sulaiman, imposed the sanctions on Mr. Damiani for fighting South African Johnny du Plooy in Italy for the newly-formed World Boxing Organization title.[44] Earlier in the year, WBC suspended promoter Micky Duff of the United Kingdom for co-promoting a boxing match in Berlin (West) between Graziano Rocchigiani of the Federal Republic of Germany and South African Sugarboy Malinga.[45] The Anti-Apartheid Movement of West Berlin organized a protest outside the venue of this boxing match.[46]

G. Olympic movement

41. The establishment of the "Apartheid and Olympism" Commission by the International Olympic Committee (IOC) has helped intensify the isolation of apartheid sport. On the recommendation of the Commission, IOC decided that athletes who competed in South Africa after 1 September 1989 would be automatically disqualified from taking part in future Olympic Games.

42. IOC also made it clear to international federations seeking Olympic participation that they should remove South Africa from its membership. Consequently, the International Tennis Federation (ITF) had to suspend South Africa's membership so as to ensure that tennis received full Olympic status. The resolution to exclude South Africa from ITF was tabled jointly by Nigeria and Sweden.

H. African sports movement

43. At the congresses of the Supreme Council for Sport in Africa (SCSA) and the Association of National Olympic Committees of Africa (ANOCA) held in December 1989, the African sports movement re-affirmed their uncompromising stand against South African sports participation until apartheid was totally eradicated. The resolutions called for total vigilance to ensure that overseas support for apartheid sport ceased as soon as possible.

I. International Convention against Apartheid in Sports

44. In October 1989, the Commission against Apartheid in Sports held its first formal meeting. The establishment of the Commission represents a major achievement in the efforts of the United Nations to strengthen the boycott of apartheid sport and to ensure the full implementation of the provisions of the International Convention against Apartheid in Sports by the States parties. In addition, it provides an incentive to other Member States and sports organizations, as well as individual sportsmen and sportswomen to observe the total isolation of South Africa in the field of sports. Recognizing the importance of the Register of Sports Contacts with South Africa, the Commission considered it as an agenda item at its meeting. The Commission also called upon Member States to continue their support and adherence to the Sports Register.

J. Support for South African sport

45. In May, an organization under the name "Brucken durch Sport" (Bridges through Sport) was formed in the Federal Republic of Germany. In its press release the organization stated it was "a known fact that the basis for the sports boycott no longer conforms to the realities of South African sport". "Full autonomy was given by the South African Government in 1976 to all sports federations in that country. Since that date racial integration has become a general feature of sport in South Africa", continued the statement. A few right-wing parliamentarians in the Federal Republic, as well as John Carlisle, a British conservative parliamentarian, participated in the founding of Brucken durch Sport. David Jacobs, a South African diplomat at Bonn, was also a founding member.[47]

46. In October the British Boxing Board of Control presented South African Brian Mitchell with the award of being the best foreign boxer in action in the United Kingdom in 1988. Mr. Mitchell, on receiving the award, said, "I particularly appreciate the fact that I was invited as a South African, with all the pressures the Board could be put under".[48]

47. A move to expel South Africa from the International Badminton Federation (IBF) failed at a meeting held at Jakarta. A joint motion by the Soviet Union and Sweden failed to obtain the three-quarters majority. Twenty-one countries voted for the expulsion motion, with 17 against and 3 abstentions.[49]

III. CONCLUSIONS

48. The international pressure on apartheid, including the isolation of South Africa in the field of sports, has undoubtedly played a significant role in the new policy of the South African Government to seek negotiations with the representatives of the majority towards a new future for the country.

49. It is evident that the sports boycott against South Africa has focused world attention on the discrimination prevailing in South African society and sports and has further intensified international demands that the régime should dismantle apartheid, including apartheid in sports. The policy of continued isolation of apartheid South Africa in sports was generally confirmed in the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa which incorporated the pledge of States Members of the United Nations that all effective and concerted measures would be taken to ensure a speedy end to apartheid and that existing measures would not be relaxed until profound and irreversible changes were made in line with the objectives of the Delcaration. In this light, the Special Committee against Apartheid will continue to issue the Sports Register, which has become an essential component in the campaign for the boycott of apartheid sport. Until apartheid is eliminated, the sports isolation of South Africa will remain in effect.

IV. DELETIONS FROM THE REGISTER

50. The Special Committee against Apartheid has received letters from several individuals undertaking not to take part in sports events in South Africa. Accordingly, the following names were deleted from the Register up to 1 April 1990:

John Ackerman, Netherlands (hockey)
Jonathan Addison, United Kingdom (cricket)*
Terry Alderman, Australia (cricket)*
Hartley Alleyne, Barbados (cricket)*

* The names of these male cricketers and motorcyclists were deleted from the Register as the result of the respective international governing bodies agreeing to take appropriate actions against apartheid in sport and was announced in a press release issued 24 October 1989 (GA/AP/1946). However, the names of cricketers and motorcyclists who do not respect the agreement will be included in the Register.
